When you browse through videos at YouTube, which do you usually click first: one with around 10 views or one with around 75,000 views? If you're normal, then you're much more likely to click on YouTube videos that have a lot of clicks already. The logic is simple.

The more views a video has, the more interesting the video must be. After all, why would a video gain so many views if it's dull or uninteresting, right?
